B.C. Timber Resources.

From the Vancouver Lumberman and Contractor the following interesting resume is taken of a bulletin of the timber resources of the province issued by the Provincial Bureau of Information:

The introductory table shows that there are in the province 182,750,000 acres of timber land, the total for the entire of Canada being 1,637,600,000 acres, this immense area being almost equal to the combined timber acreage of the other timber countries of the world.

Next to her great treasury of minerals, the bulletin points out, the most readily available, if not the most important of British Columbia's natural resources is her immense timber reserve. British Columbia may now be said to possess the greatest compact area of merchantable timber on the North American continent, and though great forest fires have raged in the interior in the years gone by the coast districts possess the major portion of the choice timber, and there, by reason of the dense growth and the humidity of the climate, the ravages of fire have not had any appreciable effect on the supply.

As far north as Alaska the coast is heavily timbered, the forest line following the indents and river valleys and fringing the mountain sides. Logging operations so far have extended to Knight's Inlet, a point on the coast of the mainland opposite the north end of Vancouver Island. Here the Douglas fir, the most important and widely dispersed of the valuable trees, disappears altogether, and the eypress, or yellow cedar, takes its place. North of this cedar, hemlock and spruce are the principal timber trees. It will be of interest to know that Douglas fir was named after David Douglas, a noted botanist, who explored New Caledonia in the early twenties of last century. It is a very widely distributed tree, being found from the coast to the summit of the Rocky Mountains, and as far east as Calgary and as far north as Fort McLeod. On the coast it attains immense proportions, is very high and clear of imperfections, sometimes towering 300 feet in the air and having a base circumference of from 30 to 50 feet. The best averages, however, are 150 feet clear of limbs and five to six feet in diameter. This is the staple timber of commerce, often classed by the trade as Oregon pine. It is scientifically described, "as standing midway between the spruce and the balsam, and in the opinion of Professor Macoun, the Dominion naturalist, is a valuable pulp-making tree.

The Giant Arbor Vitae (cedar) is next to the Douglas fir in importance in British Columbia, where it attains its greatest size on Vancouver Island, along the coast and in the lower parts of the rivers of the coast range. It is rarely found in the dry interior of British Columbia, but is abundant in the river valleys on the slopes of the Selkirk and Coast ranges. Though seldom found more than 150 feet in height, in circumference it rivals the Douglas fir, trees of from eight to ten feet in diameter not being rare, and they are occasionally found much larger. It is chiefly used in the manufacture of shingle, for which purpose it is unequalled by any other wood.

There are over 100 saw mills in the province, big and small, with a combined daily capacity of over 2,000,000 feet, but this limit has never been reached, the annual cut running between 300,000,000 and 350,000,000 feet. The acreage of timber under lease is about 2,000 square miles, and the total area of forest and woodland is estimated by the Dominion statistician at 185,554 square miles, or 182,754,500 acres, but this must not be taken as all of the present commercial value, as much of it is covered with small trees, only fit for fuel and local lumber, which would not be considered as "timber" by loggers, whose present methods of selection are very destructive, as they choose only the largest and best of the trees. In a few years from now where timber by reason of its scarcity elsewhere becomes more valuable, much that is now discarded by the timbermen will be gladly utilized, and in all probability old limits will be cut over several times.

THE BUSY MAN

If you want to get a favor done
By some obliging friend,
And want a promise, safe and sure,
On which you may depend, Don't go to him who always has Much leisure time to plan,
But if you want your favor done,
Just ask the busy man.
The man with leisure never has A moment he can spare; He's always busy "putting off" until His friends are in despair.
But he whose every waking hour
Is crowded full of work, Forgets the art of wasting time—
He cannot stop to slack;
So when you want a favor done,
And want it right away,
Go to the man who constantly Works twenty hours a day;
He'll find a moment, sure, somewhere,
That has no other use,
And fix you while the idle man
Is framing an excuse.

THE EDITOR'S LAMENT

How'd you like to be the editor,
And in the sanctum roost;
And skin through old exchanges,
And write for Jones a boost;
And give Young Sports a calling down,
Old Shady a rapping up,
Describe Miss Duff's new silk gown,
And praise Bill Syke's bull pup?
To take in three odd dollars
And pay out sixteen more,
To scheme to make two dollars
Do the work of four;
To clip and paste
And sweat and swear,
And in your pants
Big holes to wear,
To curse your luck
And write hot stuff,
Be slow to anger,
Quick to bluff,
Don old subscribers,
N'er get blue,
Go chase up news
At 7:07
I think it is just lovely, and so, no doubt, do you (?)

THE SUN IS ALWAYS SHININ'

When you go to gettin' trouble, and the world seems upside down, When misfortune stares upon you with an awful lookin' frown, There's a cheerfulness in knowin', when it's dark for me an' you,
That the sun is always shinin' an' the sky is always blue.
When the clouds appear the thickest an'
the daylight seems withdrawn, An' the hopeful joy of 'livin' seems to be entirely gone, Just remember, when the darkest, just a little distance through,
That the sun is always shinin' an' the
sky is always blue.

So there ain't no use in frettin' at the handshakes that we meet, For the birds are still a' singin' and the flowers are just as sweet; An' behind the deepest shadow there's a glad that's ever true, For the sun is always shinin' an' the sky is always blue.

A Prayer for Reporters: And now, dear Lord, bless the reporters, whose nimble pens catch every word almost before it is uttered. Like Thelwell, they are omnipresent, and almost omnipotent.
If we take the wings of the morning and fly to the uttermost parts of the earth, they are there. They meet us in the jungles of Africa, they waylay us even on the Atlantic ocean, and when we tread the prairies or climb the mountains of North America, behold! they are there. May their light and their goodness be equal to their power, and in the general assembly of heaven let no reporter be excluded.—Ez.

John Wananaker, the millionaire merchant, is quoted as follows: "I do my heaviest advertising in full time.
There is when people look more keenly for bargains, anxious to know how much things cost and where they can save money. I advertise particular things, give prices and take as much pains with my announcement as I do with my stock. I never permit any announcement to lag, and never miss an issue in my chosen publications. Advertising has made my store—it will make others grow to enormous proportions. My advice to merchants, no matter how small, is to advertise and keep advertising at it—success is sure."

Every man owes it to himself and his family to master a trade or profession.
Read the display advertisement of the six Morse Schools of Telegraphy, in this issue and learn how easily a young man or lady may learn telegraphy and be as sure a position.

Rev. Mr. McKendle will conduct Presbyterian church services at Galena, the fourth Sunday of each month, and every other Sunday in Windermere at 11 a.m., Atholmer 3 p.m., and Wilmer 7:30 p.m.

A Happy Ending.—"You must change this ending. I want a play that ends happily," said the theatrical manager.
"All right," replied the obliging dramatist; "I'll have my hero and heroine divorced in the last act."
